The Case of the Missing H-Bomb

by Jeffrey St. Clair

WHY I DEFACED THE STATUE OF TUPAC SHAKUR

Written by KENNETH ANTHONY WILSON ID4406

Friday, 20 June 2008 09:28 -

Things go missing. It's to be expected. Even at the Pentagon. Last October, the Pentagon's inspector general reported that the military's accountants had misplaced a destroyer, several tanks and armored personnel carriers, hundreds of millions of rounds of ammo, grenade launchers and some surface-to-air missiles. In all, nearly $8 billion in weapons and equipment. Those anomalies are bad enough. But what's truly chilling is the fact that the Pentagon has lost track of the mother of all weapons, a hydrogen bomb. The thermonuclear weapon, designed to incinerate Moscow, has been somewhere off the coast of Savannah, Georgia for the past 40 years. The Air Force has gone to greater lengths to prevent a mishap than to locate the bomb and secure it.

On the night of February 5, 1958 a B-47 Stratojet bomber carrying a hydrogen bomb collided with an F-86 Saberjet fighter off the Georgia coast. The collision destroyed the fighter and damaged a wing of the bomber, leaving one of its engines partially dislodged. The bomber's pilot, Maj. H. Richardson, was instructed to jettison the H-bomb before attempting a landing. Richardson dropped the bomb into the waters of Warsaw Sound, near the mouth of the Savannah River, a few miles from the city of Tybee Island.

"If you play in this country, live in this country and you grow up in the heartland - and you put on a Russian uniform - you are not a patriotic person."

This has fueled controversy in which Hammon has been labeled a traitor for choosing to directly compete against her country in an event long predicated on nationalistic pride.

Hammon became a Russian citizen earlier in 2008. The coach of Russia's team, Igor Grudin,

The announcement that she would participate in camps for the Russian national team came the same day that it was also announced that national team player (and CSKA teammate of Hammon's) Olga Arteshina had become pregnant. Hammon also signed a three-year extension with the CSKA team at around the same time she was named as a prospect for the national team.

In 2006, Hammon began working during the WNBA offseason as a sideline reporter for ESPN telecasts of
