Sunday, 09 July 2006 13:30 -* The South Bronx is home to six of the 15 neighborhoods with the highest rates of youth incarceration and poverty. South Bronx is the poorest neighborhood in the nation. * In the Bronx, overall, 100% of cases filed in adult courts involved youth of color. * In the Bronx none of the youth who were detained pretrial were held in adult jails. * In the Bronx fifty percent of black youth received a sentence of incarceration. Twenty-nine percent of Latino youth received a sentence of incarceration (as opposed to split sentences or probation). (Note: there were no White youth in the sample.) * In the Bronx no black youth were represented by retained private counsel. Youth who were represented by retained private attorneys were less likely to be convicted and more likely to be transferred back to juvenile court. * Blacks and Latinos are over 95% of NYC's incarcerated youth, with a 1/3 from the Bronx.

Sunday, 09 July 2006 13:30 -* While crime has decreased, youth incarceration has increased every year for 5 years in NYC. * Research conducted by the Juvenile Justice Project in NYC revealed when white and black youth were charged with the same offenses with no prior admissions; judges were six times more likely to incarcerate blacks than white youth. * Human Rights Watch documented nine countries which have failed to provide proper legal representation or a fair hearing to children arrested. The USA is one of them. * Currently, only six countries sentence youth to the death penalty. The USA executed more youth (9) than any other nation in the world during the 1990's.
