Many people sometimes mistakenly believe that "Tookie" is a gang nickname, but in fact it was his middle name, shared by Stanley Williams and his father, Stanley T. Williams Jr.

Last night (Monday night Dec. 19th) mourners filed past Stanley's open casket in a six hour viewing, as LA police officers kept a watchful eye on the mortuary from across the street.

The co-founder of the LA west side Crips lay in repose, as hundreds passed thru to pay their respects to the man Stanley Tookie Williams.

Dressed in a grey suit and finally free and at peace, the more than 2000 mourners of all ages gathered at the House of Winston Mortuary on South Vermont Avenue at 95th Street to give Stanley Williams his last respects from his old neighborhood.

Many of the viewers were clad in Crip Blue and things were a little tense when members of traditional Crips rivals, The Bloods, showed up and took their place in line to show their respects.

At least now Stanley Tookie Williams is free and at peace. R.I.P. Stanley Tookie Williams III.
