

Political Action Committee to Reveal and Correct Discrimination in Florida's Largest and Most Diverse School District

Multi platinum Miami rap artist, Trick Daddy, the top selling rap artist for Slip-n-Slide records, announced today that he is throwing his support to Concerned Citizens of Miami-Dade County Schools (www.ccfmds.com). The Miami-based political action committee formed after a number of hotly contested school board seat races ended in a run-off election scenario. This is a county already accustomed to allegations of racial discrimination in a state that will take the national stage on Election Day.

"I live here, and I see what goes on in the schools. We have racists trying to buy seats on our school boards," explained Trick Daddy. "Kids don't have new books, so I guess it's our job to not elect crooks. Crooks, because they rob kids of the tools and rules they need to get ahead and survive the system that failed a lot of my friends."

Concern Citizens for Miami-Dade County Schools will dedicate all of its efforts on elections that will benefit all children, not just children of privilege. Concerned Citizens is committed to ending the socio-economic imbalance in Miami-Dade Schools. The PAC will also emphasize the importance of voter turnout, not just registration.

"Registering to vote is like only finishing 50% of your homework; showing up on Election Day is the other 50%," stressed Ted Lucas, CEO of Slip-n-Slide Records. "Failing to vote on Election Day fails the entire community and we are proud to have artists on this label that want to help in their own backyard!"
