

Malcolm X Tupac

Written by Robert ID45

Thursday, 09 December 2004 20:46 -

Did Our Generation Lose Our Malcolm, When Tupac Died?

Generations seem to always have a "voice" that speaks for them.

In my fathers generations case it was Bro.Min. Malcolm X. Malcom X made white society uneasy. The words he spoke where full of truth, and a need for social change. That "voice" of that generation was silenced on 2-21-65 at 3:10 p.m. in the Audubon Ballroom in Harlem. That day "The Prince of Harlem" was forced to leave this world, his family and a whole generation behind.

My generation had Tupac Shakur. Who spoke or rapped or wrote in poetry the truth about the status of the social problems and also preached a need for a social change. On Sat. Sept. 7th, 1996 at 11:15 pm Tupac Shakur was shot. Although he fought like a souljah for a week, those wounds took his life on Sept. 13th, 1996 at 4:03pm. Our generations "voice" was silenced.

In generations past when one voice was stilled another rose up to carry on the work of the first. Bro. Min. Malcolm X had The Black Panthers to pick up the touch and to continue to voice the ill's of the society and point out a need for change.

Today our voice is still not found or remains silent. When gangsta rap first came about, it was out of need. A need to point out the social failings and the cause or root of the problem.

Groups like NWA, Public Enemy, Ice T, Tupac Shakur and many Westcoast groups rapped about the social ill's and a need for change. And even pointed out that many were fed up with being ignored. The "ol thought of politicians of "Ignore them and they will go away..." wasn't working.

Malcolm X Tupac

Written by Robert ID45

Thursday, 09 December 2004 20:46 -

Rap music and gangsta rap brought society face to face with the truth of life in the hood and what it took to survive on the streets. And the politicians didn't like it. Ice T's Cop Killers, or NWA's Straight Out of Compton made people uneasy. They were afraid of what they saw; and what they saw was the truth staring them in the face.

The past generation had the Black Panthers and other organizations to make sure the message continued. And thanks to their hard work, Americans of color are no longer living under Jim Crowe laws.

Who has stepped up to carry on where Tupac was cut short? Where are the "Brenda's Got a Baby" or "Keep Ya Head Up" , "Changes" , "Dear Mama" , "Me Against The World" , and the list goes on and on.

Eastcoast rap has dominated the rap scene the last few years. The bases for the "East" rap is clubb'en, hoochie's, and gym shoes. The younger generation watches video's that are mainly about getting drunk, what kind of ride ya got, what hoe you can pull, or what your wearing and these things are what is important to them. And then they find those things all cost money, and many of them find themselves hung up in the system; trying to get them.

There is no social message in the Eastcoast based music we have today. The biggest controversy that is recent is about "Pimp Juice". What importance will that have on a child in the streets? I agree that that drink should not be out there; but aren't there so many issues that could be addressed and brought to light? Issues of social change and social meaning?

I am afraid we have lost our voice for good in my generation. And now they are remixing and re remixing the words of Tupac, slowly watering them down until they will have lost their meaning and standing in history.

I would wish for that "new" voice to be heard. Where are the NWA's , the Public Enemy's now that we need a voice. Nothing against Nelly or Chingy or any of the "good time" rappers, but it is not all good times out here for all of us, and we are desperate for a voice.

Malcolm X Tupac

Written by Robert ID45

Thursday, 09 December 2004 20:46 -

When rappers are more involved in dissing each other or looking for beef with each other, instead of trying to make a change; they should not claim they are for or from the street. Use that energy and talent and make a difference. Some try to imitate Tupac. They try to dress like him, sound like him, roll like him; which is funny. Because they have missed the point of who Tupac Shakur was. He wasn't a certain sound or dress; he was a social teacher, a man who pointed out the ill's of society and ways to deal with it. Tupac is reported to only have had around One hundred thousand dollars in the bank at the time of his death. Why? Because he did a lot of charity work . Starting inner-city baseball leagues, or scholarship funds for inner-city youth. He was out to not only point out the short comings of society toward those of color and others; but to do something about it. He was from the streets, and that is why he is so loved even to this day.

Until some one comes along with the mind set of a Malcolm or a Tupac, or a rapper or group steps up , stands up and points out the world beyond their doorway, I feel YES we have lost our generations voice----the voice of Tupac Shakur. RIP dear souljah. It is proven with every cd that is released you can never be replaced or forgotten. I only wish someone would pick up your "torch" and carry on where you were silenced. And as you said many times-----ONE LOVE....I sign: Robert

Two web sites to visit to find out more about Bro. Min. Malcolm X and Tupac Shakur are :

For Bro. Min. Malcolm X: <http://www.brothermalcolm.net> and For Tupac Shakur : <http://www.2paclegacy.com>