

A Note From The Staff About Our News

Written by Site Staff ID757

Wednesday, 27 July 2005 16:00 -

From time to time a news post will be called into question on our site. This seldom happens, since we source all news or get it first hand from the parties involved. That is one reason we are considered a legitimate news source.

Unlike some web based news sites who do not source their news, we feel our sourcing policy is the best for all involved.

For the agency or person who writes an article we post, we provide a direct link to where the news was found. This gives them 'credit' for their work.

For the reader it gives a source to back up any news that is read here.

And for us it gives a source that people can follow up on and make sure what we have posted is 'real'.

There are a few times that things are brought up and we are contacted about a news post. When this happens we go out of our way to make sure that the source information is provided where asked for.

This recently has happened with a post that we ran.

We provided all contact information for where we had obtained our news.

The person who was so concerned about the post was not concerned enough to follow thru with checking with the source to find out the legitimacy of the news that was posted; that they were questioning.

A Note From The Staff About Our News

Written by Site Staff ID757

Wednesday, 27 July 2005 16:00 -

We would ask that if you take time to question anything on this site, and we take our time to provide all necessary information for clarification; at least follow thru. If you do not, you just seem like a hater and we do not have a lot of extra time to 'play around' with haters or those who missed their medication for that day.

We are more than happy to provide source information, if the source tab on the article is not sufficient or if the news was first hand and we are the source.

Please feel free to always contact us, but on the same note – please follow thru and just not draw into question the legitimacy of a post if you are not willing to follow thru and check it out.

Thank you for your continued support and your faith in us.

The Staff of ThugLifeArmy.com