Lawyers for NBA star Kobe Bryant and a Colorado woman who accused him of sexual assault say they've settled a civil suit she filed.

Terms of the agreement have not been released. A statement faxed by Bryant's attorneys says only that the matter has been resolved "to the satisfaction of both parties."

The lawsuit was filed three weeks before the criminal case against Bryant collapsed last summer. It sought unspecified damages for mental injuries, public scorn and humiliation the woman said she has suffered since her June 2003 encounter with Bryant at the Vail-area hotel where she worked.

He has said they had consensual sex.
