Latin hip-hop legend Bimbo has now officially cemented his position as Reggaeton's newest star, by his selection for Rolling Stone's 'The Hot List' in the new December 15 issue of the magazine, which hits stands today.

One of the world's most internationally-recognized Latin Music superstars, Bimbo, is now reaping major American success with the release of his first album in the Reggaeton arena, "Bimbo Presenta: Reggaeton 100x35," released by B&E Entertainment and distributed by Urban Box Office (UBO).

The new CD's first single, "Fuleteame Mi Tanque" ("Fill Up My Gas Tank"), has been burning up dance floors and radio all over the world since its initial release. And its highly-controversial music video sparked headlines all on its own, with its wickedly satirical stand against the skyrocketing price of gas, caused by oil company gouging and political payoffs.

And now, the editors at Rolling Stone have chosen "Fuleteame El Tanque" and its video as one of their five favorites in the new edition.

Check Bimbo out in the new Rolling Stone and be sure to check out his album and see what all the buzz is about.
