Funk legend and friend of hip-hop George Clinton is launching his new independent record label The C Kunspruhzy (pronounced "The C Conspiracy"), and the signing of a national distribution deal with Big Daddy Music Distribution for his forthcoming album "How Late Do You Have 2 B B 4 U R Absent?" slated for worldwide release on September 6, 2005.

Big Daddy is a winner of the National Academy of Recording Merchandisers (NARM) Small Distributor of the Year award, having been nominated six times for the honor. The company handles distribution for a wide variety of pop, rap, hip-hop, R&B and jazz artists, including pop-icon Prince's NPG Music Club.

"We are thrilled to add George Clinton to our roster," says Burt Goldstein, Big Daddy's president. "We are excited about the prospects for success with Clinton's new album and look forward to a long and mutually beneficial relationship."

George Clinton is planning a 50th Anniversary national concert tour this fall, major media appearances, and a major marketing campaign to support the release.
